B. sb. A mason or builder belonging to this guild. 1899 'L. Scott' Cathedral Builders 5 The origin of the name Comacine Masters has caused a great deal of argument amongst Italian writers new and old. Some think it merely a place-name referring to the island of Comacina, in Lake Lario or Como; others take a wider significance, and say it means not only the city of Como, but all the province, which was once a Roman colony of great extension. Others again, among whom is Grotius, suggest that it is not a place-name at all, but comes from the Teutonic word Gemachin or house-builders. As the Lombards afterwards called them in Italian Maestri Casarii, which means the same thing, there is perhaps something to be said for this hypothesis. Ibid. 9 Rome is full of remains of what is now styled Comacine architecture. Ibid. 17 There is no certain proof that the Comacines were the veritable stock from which the pseudo-Freemasonry of the present day sprang. 1900 Monthly Rev. I. 103 The Comacine masters have their existence sufficiently proved by the edict of Rotharis (dated 653). Ibid. 104 The collegiate and Comacine constitutions.

1899 *Westm. 1877 *Encycl. 1888 STRONG tr. Paul's Princ. Lang. 160 By 'contamination' I understand the process by which synonymous forms of expression force themselves simultaneously into consciousness, so that neither of the two makes its influence felt simply and purely: a new form arises in which elements of the one mingle with elements of the other. Ibid., Contamination manifests itself partly in the phonetic form of single words, partly in their syntactical combination. 1891 STRONG, LOGEMAN & WHEELER Hist. Lang. 142 We may lay it down that for analogy we must demand a sufficient number of examples on which to base a rule; while for contamination, a single form or construction may suffice. 1901 OETHEL Lect. Study Lang. 174 The structure of grammatical paradigms does not escape contamination.

(c) Palaeography. A blending of manuscripts resulting in the occurrence in a manuscript or group of manuscripts of readings belonging to different lines of tradition.

1913 F. W. HALL Comp. Class. Texts 130 The problem of relationship of MSS. is often rendered exceedingly complex by the tendency which is variously described as 'contamination', 'mixture', or 'eclectic fusion' of the different groups.

8. Of a bar of steel, etc.: A very slow increase in length under excessive stress. Cf. *CREEP v. 8.

1924 F. C. LEA in Proc. Inst. Mech. Engin. II. 1066 At stresses slightly above this the creep was continuous and the bar broke. Ibid. 1072 It will thus stand a higher stress without creep. 1928 Daily Express 29 June 6 Investigations are being made into the 'creep' in metals.

9. The slip of the belt on the pulley drum, or wheel over which it runs.

Creep, v. Add:

4. c. Of salts in solution: To rise in crystals upon the sides of the containing vessel.

1900 Nature 4 Oct. 561/1 Dr. Tronçon gave a short account of his experiments on the creeping of liquids, and on the surface tensions of mixtures. He has found that the tendency of certain liquids to creep up the sides of their containing vessels is due to such liquids being mixtures. 1901 W. R. COOPER Prim. Batteries 195 When evaporation of a salt takes place in a glass vessel, crystals form on the vessel near the surface of the solution; and... the crystals grow upward and finally grow over the top of the vessel.

This 'creeping', as it is termed, is avoided in Leclanché cells by dipping the tops of the glass pots into ozokerite or paraffin wax. 1911 T. MATHER Ayrton's Pract. Electr. 194 Their compactness, portability, freedom from all creeping of the salts.

8. Also, to increase very gradually in length under excessive stress.

1899 J. A. EWING Strength Mater. 24 When a load exceeding the elastic limit is applied the strain which occurs at once is followed by a continued 'creeping' or supplementary deformation. 1911 — in Encycl. Brit. XXV. 1074/1 The elastic limit is the point... at which a tendency to creep is first seen. 1924 F. C. LEA in Proc. Inst. Mech. Engin. II. 1053 The problem is to find the safe stress at which the material will not change form or creep. Ibid. 1072 At 11.40 a.m. on the 11th the specimen had crept 0.2 millimetre, but at 11.40 a.m. on the 14th the creeping had ceased.

10. Of soil, etc.: To be gradually moved or dislocated.

1843 J. PHILLIPS in Rep. Brit. Assoc. (1844) 61 This seemed to be the result of a 'creeping' movement of the particles of rock along the planes of cleavage. 1855 — Man. Geol. 85 Thus the mica and chlorite which generally meet the surfaces of lamination, appear to have been shouldered about, without being fused, twisted in their structural planes, and subject to that curious minute folding which is often observed as one of the effects of cleavage structure in delicate and pliable shells in slates, for which the term 'creep' was used by the author in 1843.

11. Of a rubber tyre. (Cf. *CREEP sb. 10.)

1903 Motoring Anni. 300 It is claimed for the Collier tyre that it cannot possibly creep. 1908 Westm. Gaz. 25 Feb. 4/2, I understand that they have a great tendency to creep.

12. Of a belt or rope: To slip or slide backwards on the pulley. (Cf. *CREEP sb. 9.)

1922 F. V. HETZEL Belt Conveyors 124 A poorly made belt... will creep more and cause more wear than a good belt.
